Founder's Day banquet features Bob Clement

By TOMMY TORLAY
Features Editor

Bob Clement, who has been nominated by President Carter for the vacancy on the Tennessee Valley Authority's three-man board of directors, was the guest speaker at the 15th annual Alpha Tau Omega Founders Day in the University Center Ballroom Saturday Feb. 17.

Braving chilly winds and snow flurries, about 250 people attended the banquet. Accompanying Clement and his wife Mary, were State Representative and Mrs. John Tanner, (D) -Union City, and former State Representative and Mrs. Walter Bizzart of Lewisburg.

Smiling and very boyish-looking at 35, Clement told several funny stories and jokingly blamed his loss in the Democratic primary to Jake Butcher on the "infinite wisdom of the ATO alumni because they told him to run." Clement was an ATO at UT Knoxville.

On a more serious note, Clement called for the younger generation to get involved.

"A lot of people depend on the safety and security of one job or position and are afraid to take a chance," he said.

Clement gave up an almost certain re-election to the Public Service Commission last year to run for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

"I didn't want to be a spectator, I wanted to make a difference," said Clement. "We need people who will take a chance in Tennessee and the United States."

On the governor's race, Clement quoted the words of Winston Churchill when he said, "never give up."

"I was disappointed by the race and I was negative for awhile, but we all have got to keep trying and caring," stated Clement.

"About one third of the people in Tennessee between 18 and 30 years of age not registered to vote," said Clement.

He urged those who were not registered to vote, to do so and get involved.

Concluding his speech, Clement told the story of a man who got involved, but never received credit for his accomplishments.

"Back in 1775, William Dawes was a simple, uneducated farmer who knew what to believe," said Clement.

When the British decided to march to Concord, Dawes was one of the first to volunteer because "he knew what he was fighting for."

Dawes and a man named Paul Revere were given the task of warning Samuel Adams and John Hancock in Concord. Although Revere was the first to reach Concord, Dawes arrived about a half an hour later and was institutional in warning the citizens of New England about the British, according to Clement.

"Dawes completed his duty, but because of a poet's whim, never got the credit he deserved," said Clement.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow described Revere's ride in his famous poem "The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere."

One man can make the difference and every man should try to commit himself to improving our country," Clement said.

Brother Bob

Bob Clement, former head of the Public Service Commission and recent TVA commissioner-designate, speaks before the 15th annual Alpha Tau Omega Founder's Day banquet Saturday Feb. 17. Clement, who ran unsuccessfully for the democratic gubernatorial nomination against Jake Butcher, was an ATO during his college days in Knoxville.

World trick shot champ gives billiards exhibition

By DOROTHY BOCK
Copy Editor

Paul Gerni, world champion trick shot artist and billiards expert from Kansas City, Missouri, demonstrated his talent Tuesday, Feb. 20 in the University Center Ballroom.

Gerni, one of the world's most active and in-demand pocket billiard performers, demonstrated several different shots including his famous 12 ball in one shot trick. He did several trick shots including the shooting of the eight ball with the cue ball from the mouth of a WBBJ reporter.

Several students had a chance to show their skills before the large crowd by attempting various trick shots, which were set up by Gerni.

Working before a large crowd is hard to do without getting nervous and messing everything up.

"I work on a few shots before the show to find out how the table plays. No two tables are alike. All of the humidity situations make a difference," said Gerni.

"The real practice is mental. The nervous system doesn't know the difference between physical practice and mental practice," he said.

While flying in to a place, Gerni practices on the plane to find out how to psych himself up.

"I see myself mentally in every situation, chalking the cue, watching where the cue ball goes, and watching the other balls," stated Gerni.

All of the equipment Gerni uses, except for his cue stick, belongs to whoever he plays for.

"I feel I have to be able to play on any equipment or people think my whole show is set up," he stated.

According to Gerni, his cue stick, which is made out of ivory, is worth over $2,000.

"I could buy a couple 100,000 hamburgers yearly," Gerni said, when Steve Warren, News Editor of The Pacer asked what his gross income was.

Gerni, who also set up shots for Robert Blake in "Baretta," and "The Bionic Woman" will start his world tour on March 4. He will be travelling to Sweden, Germany, Newfoundland and across the United States.

SGA sponsored Paul Gerni's appearance at UTM.

Recombinant DNA: the implications

"Recombinant DNA: Scientific and Social Perspectives" will be discussed by Dr. Vaughn Vandergrift, professor of biological chemistry, Thursday, Feb. 22 at UTM.

Dr. Vandergrift will be the guest of the UT Martin chapter of the Student Affiliates of the American Chemical Society (SAACS) and will present the seminar during the society's regular monthly meeting at 7 p.m. in the University Center.

The Murray State University chemistry professor will explain the methods and nature of recombinant DNA technology and reasons for social and scientific concern about the process in a talk informative to both scientist and layman.

A two-time graduate of Montclair State College, Dr. Vandergrift holds a doctorate in the area of chromosomal protein and DNA interactions from Ohio University.

His research with DNA has continued since graduation from college and he has published several articles related to his research.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Additional information is available from Dr. S.K. Airee, 308 EPS Building, UTM, Martin, TN 38238, 587-7454.

Agricultural Week provides awareness

Meetings with agricultural business representatives, a banquet featuring William H. Walker, state deputy commissioner of agriculture, workshops and agricultural films highlight activities at UTM's Agricultural Week, Feb. 19-23.

According to Dr. Rodney Thomsen, assistant professor or agricultural economics, Agricultural Week at UTM is designed to promote the field of agriculture.

"This is an awareness program for our agricultural students," Thomsen said. "It gives our students an opportunity to meet agricultural businessmen and to discuss the various careers available to the agriculture major. The activities should also be of interest to area residents and anyone interested in agriculture."

The week's activities began

Monday, Feb. 19, at 6:30 p.m. in Room 200 of Brehm Hall. Several films dealing with various aspects of agriculture were shown to the public.

"Ag Week at UTM is designed primarily for UTM students, but we are encouraging interested area residents to participate in the week's activities," said Thomsen.

A Future Farmers of America parliamentary procedure workshop for presidents of student organizations, members of the academic senate, and interest persons, was held Tuesday, Feb. 20, at 7 p.m. in the University Center.

Wednesday's Career Day in Brehm Hall gave students and interested persons an opportunity to meet with representatives from the agriculture industry about trends in agriculture, careers, and job requirements.

Religious cults discussed at recent 'Open Forum'

By BARRY WARBRITTON
Staff Writer

At this week's Open Forum, Adam Hall, director of the Baptist Student Union, spoke on cults.

"Cults are actually a counterfeit of a particular religion," he said. "We think of them primarily with regard to Christianity, but there are cults of all the major religions."

"Cr. Charles Braden has defined cults as any religious group which differs significantly in one or more respects as to belief or practice from those religious groups which are regarded as normative expressions of religion in our total culture," Hall said.

Hall stated some of these cults includes The Children of God, The Unification Church, Transcendental Meditation, The Way, The Love Family, The Alamo Christian Foundation, and The People's Temple.

According to Hall, most cults are centered around a particular person's interpretation of the Bible and some of them might even be considered as religious denominations by some people, but these cults stray from the straight and narrow.

"These are all centered around one man's interpretation of scripture. There are probably between one and six million people involved in cults in the United States," Hall said.

"I think that one of the things we see today is that there is a great deal of love and concern shown by people who are in the cults and this is one of the things that takes young people into the cults. To me it's the most important thing about cults. It is the counterfeiting of the verse in John 14:35 where it says 'If you love the Father it will be known by the people around us by our love for the brethren.' That love fulfills a need in a young person's heart and life, Hall said.

According to Hall, this counterfeit love permits the desertion of a brother when he develops a disease or affliction that hinders his work for the cult.

Many cults invite a prospective initiate to a meeting similar to Open Forum, said Hall, where they discuss ways in which to better the world. Religion is usually not mentioned in this first meeting.

According to Hall the cult members invite the initiate to a sort of weekend retreat where he is constantly watched and continuously exposed to the cult's doctrine. By the time the retreat is over, he cult usually has gained a convert.

At next week's Open Forum a native of Greece will speak on modern Greek culture.

On March 6, Dr. Mahootchie, associate professor of occupational education, will speak concerning the situation in Iran.

Open Forum, which is a weekly program designed to discuss unusual subjects, is presented each Tuesday at noon in room 132C of the University Center.

Poster contest

Conservation is the word

By STEPHEN WARREN
New Editor

The name of the game is ENERGY CONSERVATION, and our campus is going to start playing the game if the newly formed UTM Energy Conservation Committee has its way.

The committee consists of residence hall Resident Assistants, and David Belote and Ray Montgomery of the Housing Department. The participating RA's are Robert Beasley, Vonne Ortiz, Elizabeth Hopkins, Tim Hayden, Amanda Touchton, Ken Watkins, Serena Williams, and Tommy McGlown.

The committee is responsible for the energy conservation posters which are springing up on campus.

"The main thrust of our project is that of awareness," stated Dave Belote.

The committee has scheduled a poster contest, an essay contest, and a dormconservation contest in order to make the campus aware of energy conservation.

The poster contest is open to all current UTM students. All entries must be submitted before noon of March 7, 1979. The theme for all entries is "Energy Conservation in the Residence Hall." All posters must be 18" x 24". The entrant's name, address, and classification must be legibly printed on the back, in the upper right-hand corner.

There is no limit on poster construction. Any materials may be used. Any method of message conveyance may be employed. Students may enter as often as they like.

The posters will be judged on ideas presented, neatness, and originality, the decisions of the judges will be final. Posters will become the property of the energy awareness committee.

The first place winner will receive $25. The second place winner will receive $10.

"We're going to use the posters around campus," said Robert Beasley. "It's more or less an advertisement scheme on our part to make the students more aware of energy conservation."

The essay contest will also have a first prize of $25 and a second prize of $10, and is open to all current UTM students.

UT-owned state car issue was not handled logically

The recent state resolution passed by state lawmakers ordering UT officials to roll back pay hikes given to 29 top UT administrators in place of their state-owned cars could have been advertised by a more logical move on the part of the UT officials.

If the state cars were given to the UT administrators for official use why was a pay increase awarded to those who turned in their cars? The two do not correspond with each other. The most sensible move would have been to increase each of the administrator's office budgets to include more money for travel expenses to use a car from Motorpool. In this way the administrators would not get a flat amount of money in the form of a pay raise to supposedly pay for travel expenses using their personal car. Granted it might be a problem getting a University-owned car from Motorpool on short notice, but it is assumed that administrative personnel receive priority in services provided by the University.

If the UT administrators were hired with the understanding they would have a state car they should be provided one, but not necessarily one specifically assigned to them 24-hours a day. The Motorpool does not have a surplus of cars, but many days cars sit in the parking lot unused, there is no way to know exactly how many cars will be needed on a given day although the cars are to be reserved several days in advance. And if a car is not available the other option is to use a personal car and be reimbursed for mileage. In these days of cutting back taxes and conservation of gas with predictions of future high gas prices it doesn't seem unjust to ask UT administrators to give up a personally assigned car.

The announcement by the Legislature's Fiscal Review Committee to request abolishment of all non-essential state cars was what instigated the exchange of UT cars assigned to administrators for the pay raise. But who is to judge which cars are non-essential? To a very conservative person concerned with saving money any car could be considered non-essential. If the state is to judge which cars are non-essential they must find out why the cars are being used and where they are going. To do this would take an investigative department as a part of the Motorpool qualifying each request for a state car. To do this would be ridiculous and very time consuming. If the number of cars available through the UT Motorpool is to be reduced by Tennessee lawmakers this might be necessary to insure each car to be used only for essential UT business.

Black History discussed

During the formative days of this nation, a man wrote an awe inspiring sentence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal..."

The Pacer holds by that policy and for men, read people regardless of color or race or other superficiality.

Last week was Black History Week, and, as it has through the years, The Pacer goes again on record supporting that week. There are many reasons why The Pacer supports the celebrating of Black History Week.

One of them goes back to the creed articulated in the Declaration—that all men are created equal. For many years, not all men have been treated equally in this nation, some men have been denied even their own heritage—that special something that makes each group of people wonderfully unique.

Black History is that time of the year set aside because we have not yet been able to treat all men as equals but are trying. And that effort includes educating the campus community about the black heritage, that special something that makes black Americans so very unique.

The Pacer, realizing this, would like to suggest a few things which might make the celebrating of Black History Week more meaningful to the entire campus community.

First, it should be a campus wide thing. Everyone on campus, from highest to lowest freshman should know that that week is Black History Week. Posters and stories and activities should remind all.

Second, black students can be a driving force behind this celebration of their heritage. They can rally behind the BSA and the Office of Minority Affairs. They should remember that these institutions belong to the black community and should be used. Black students should be willing to pour their hearts, their very soul as it is into those organizations so that they will accomplish something truly memorable. The world needs to be reminded again that black too is beautiful even as is red, yellow, brown, and white.

But to even make a start, we need to reassess our thinking and doing. It has been said by a few that the Black History Week events were not meaningful. It is not our purpose here to judge, but if they were not meaningful, then it is time to redo the Black History Week idea.

Next time around, there could be a real campaign starting early with the planning and preplanning. Committees could investigate more than one speaker so that in terms of getting a speaker, there will be options. The BSA will then not be locked into hit or miss operations trying to throw all its resources into one person.

There could also be movies or filmstrips depicting great people who should have been in American history but, because of their color, were ignored.

Plays and music should also be included as well as poetry readings and creative dancing. The black community is not culturally sterile so why act as though it is.

With these ideas firmly in mind, perhaps when Black History comes back around again, it will be truly a memorable event.

And we will be that much closer to the idea so beautifully articulated in the Declaration of Independence.

Education budget refuted

Although President Carter's proposed budget for the 1979-80 fiscal year would provide more financial backing for university-funded research projects, The Pacer feels that equal attention should also be given to the primary reason colleges and universities exist in the first place, namely teaching.

According to Walter Lambert, special assistant for federal relations for the entire UT system, Carter's proposed budget appropriates some $500 million less for higher education than does the present budget. Most of this reduction will occur in the areas of student aid, institutional aid to UT's medical units, and library funding. Institutional research will be cut back to a somewhat lesser degree. The Pacer, while acknowledging the fact that some cutbacks may indeed be substantiated in an attempt to bring the federal budget to a more balanced condition, believes that any such cutback should be first levied on the research work being done by a university, and then the various student-affected portions of the university. This statement is justified by noting that without students, a university cannot exist.

With research, however, that does not hold true. UTM is a good example of a university whose primary emphasis is on teaching and not on research of various kinds.

This is not to say that research is not an integral part of this country's higher education setup. Without research, it is highly doubtful that society could ever advance beyond the limitations of its present knowledge and insight into how the world operates. It should also be said, though, that without adequate funds to get this knowledge across to the coming generations, such knowledge is of very little value. One complements the other. This would insure a steady rate of knowledge increase, thus keeping both aspects of higher education in a very efficient symbiotic relationship.

In conclusion, The Pacer would like it known that from a totally educational viewpoint, it would be better if the available funds could be increased instead of decreased. Since this will apparently not be possible, however, the UT system should use discretion in the utilization of what funds it does receive. In this way, the decrease could become only a minor obstacle on the road to a more informed society.

Weather policy discussed

Torlay's Tales

Every winter as the snow blankets the campus and ice glazes the University walkways, the issue of canceling classes surfaces.

In the UTM Inclement Weather Policy for 1979, the decision to close the University rests solely in the hands of Chancellor Larry T. McGehee. This is the way it should be. In large city school systems such as Memphis and Nashville, the ruling on school closings are handled by the school superintendents as part of their job.

During 50 years of existence, UTM has only been closed twice by bad weather.

The first time was in 1964 when the late Dr. Paul Meek closed the school and roving bands of students broke windows and damaged school property. These incidents incited the myth that UTM would never close no matter what the conditions, because students with nothing to do would riot and demolish the town.

The second time occurred on Feb. 7, 1979 when Martin was covered with a state high of 12 inches of snow and Chancellor McGehee closed school.

However, on other days when snow made roads and walkways hazardous, school has remained open.

McGehee cited several valid reasons for school remaining open. University services such as Maintenance Food Services and Safety and Security remained open regardless of the severity of the weather. Also, approximately 3,500 of UTM's 5,000 students live within a mile of campus and attendance is normal when the weather is bad.

Many students will play and drive in the snow anyway, so why shouldn't that energy be harnessed in the classroom. Most University walkways and the commuters parking lot are cleared as early as possible.

The University has a sound bad weather policy, but it could withstand a few improvements. Sometimes commuting students and instructors can't travel on slick roads. The University must make sure these people can get in touch with officials of their departments and they should be excused.

In case of class closure, the University could stockpile a few old movies to show the students or possibly serve hot chocolate in the University Center.

The chancellor has done a fair job exerting an inclement weather policy and his decisions have been very responsible.

'Knowledge?'

A Final Reply

by Danny Lamb

A Final Reply to "Is Knowledge Knowable?"

Mr. Hughey's reply to my criticism of his article, "Is Knowledge Knowable?", helps to clarify the basic thrust of his initial argument. With this clarification, I am in agreement with much of what he has to say. However, there is an inconsistency involved in one's sayings that no one is capable of attaining a state of objectivity. This is the case because one is claiming at least some state of objectivity in attempting to deny it.

Mr. Hughey's insistence that one should accept as truth or knowledge only what is reasonable to him is well-founded. However, one's subjective acceptance of truth or knowledge does not make it so. Truth or knowledge does not depend upon my subjective interpretation. It is not I who decides that there is no such thing as a round square or that every precisely stated proposition is either true or false. Each holds true regardless of my subjective feelings. An objective body of truth or knowledge exists, but it does not depend upon my subjective interpretation.

Mr. Hughey is to be commended for attempting to answer such an important philosophical question. I shall continue to read his articles with great interest.

Volunteer and get involved

Wizard's Words

Have you ever offered to help someone with something with the idea that you were only helping and then have it turn out that everyone suddenly had a test the next day, or had a deathly disease, or just plainly could not be found anywhere? What do you do about this? This is a question that I need an answer to because I enjoy helping people as much as I can and a lot of the time it ends up with me doing everything.

Don't get me wrong. I really like doing for others and knowing that you are trusted is a good feeling but it is really bad when you get shouldered with a lot of nonacademic things while you already have plenty of academic things to do. There is only so much time in one day for a person to do his personal things like eating, sleeping, going to class, taking showers and whatever else without having to worry about taking care of others.

The activities in the residence halls are a good example of what I'm getting at. The residence assistants, head residents, assistant head residents and members of the hall council do a terrific job of planning things for the dorm to do, while also taking care of all the work involved to make these plans happen. These people deserve some credit for trying to liven up their dorms and I would like to say "thank you" for everything you've done.

The ones who do not deserve any credit are the residents who just sit around in their room complaining that there is nothing to do in Martin. This does not apply to students who spend a lot of time studying. People with comments like "Martin is boring," this dorm never does anything" and "there is nothing to do in this town" should just stop and think about what they did to liven this place up, besides going to Hillary's and the Hourglass and getting drunk. Sure this is fun to do and guarantees a good night's sleep but there have got to be other things to do on campus.

Everyone is different. No two people have identical thoughts. If there are any please come to see me. With all the students on this campus there just have to be some good ideas for ways to pass the time.

If you volunteer to help someone with a project, please keep your promise. The worse feeling in the world is for a person to depend on someone else's help in the beginning and find out in the end that they never meant to help. If you can't make it because of a real test, or illness try to let someone know so that someone else can be found to help.

If you want something to do on those cold or rainy winter nights, a good idea might be to go to floor meetings to find out what will be going on and just give your residence assistant a chance.

In conclusion, something that is completely off the sub-

FEEDBACK

To the Editor:

I would like to commend The Pacer for a brilliant and thought-provoking editorial concerning the SGA's handling of the Atlanta Rhythm Section cancellation. I was present in the crowd that night and the editorial was totally correct. I guess the SGA was too busy keeping warm in the heated P.E. Complex to worry about the rest of us out there in the 20 degree weather. I wouldn't have been half as mad with the SGA if they had told me as soon as they knew something. Again, the editorial was great.

Lee Wilson

To the Editor:

In response to the column "Insight" I would like to express my support for the SGA. My job is to deliver the performers to the fieldhouse in time for the concert. All other dealings are beyond my control. So on Saturday, Feb. 3 as I waited at the Jackson Airport for ARS, I got a first hand view of the situation. When Concerts Alive learned that ARS was not going to arrive because of inclement weather, other forms of transportation were hurriedly set up. A conflict rode conflict, the clock also clicked onward. When it was finally definite that the concert would be called off, the SGA was mortified. When the announcement was made, Concerts alive tried desperately to get a definite yes or no in order to notify the fans before the concert. But a definite answer was not reached until very late in the evening.

So, in my opinion, I believe your comment on highly irresponsible and uncomplementary behavior on the SGA's part is totally uncalled for in this situation.

Gregg Britt

Editorial

commended

To the Editor:

I would like to commend The Pacer on the editorial, "ARS concert cancellation causes confusion for SGA," which appeared in the Feb. 15 issue of that newspaper.

I was one of the 4,000 people standing outside the Fieldhouse waiting for the concert. All I can say is that I was glad I was with someone. People were yelling obscenities about Martin and the ARS. There was a lot of confusion and I was afraid things were going to get out of hand.

I feel that this situation could have been avoided if the SGA had let people know about the cancellation as soon as they knew the ARS was not going to be able to keep their engagement. I agree with The Pacer and hope the SGA has learned a valuable lesson from this experience.

Jackie Smith

Salary

To the Editor:

Thanks for the raise! Fred Maxwell's article (PACER, Feb. 15, 1979) gives me a salary $3,249.08 higher than what I actually make. He didn't ask me what my salary is, and his story didn't identify the source of his information. If he had asked, I could have told him the correct figure, and that I also turned $2,557 of my salary back to UTM in 1978 and am returning $2,200 to UTM this year.

The national median for campus chief executives of campuses with enrollments of 2,500-5,000 and budgets under fifteen million dollars is $48,000 for 1978-79, according to the College and University Personnel Association.

Actually, I am hoping to secure a head coaching position at a major university so I can move up to about $150,000 a year with a four-year contract.

Larry McGehee
Chancellor

Editor's Note:

I would like to apologize for the use of what has turned out to be incorrect data as the Chancellor points out. I didn't ask what his salary was because I felt certain my source would exercise more care than this. I got the information from the Nashville Banner dated Feb. 2. The article Car-Pay Issue at UT fueled by Reese Talk starts on page one of that issue and jumps to page four.

Fred Maxwell

Editorial

appreciated

To the Editor:

This is a letter of appreciation to The Pacer for the editorial concerning UTM's black news publication, Viewpoint, in the Feb. 4 issue.

As was pointed out in that editorial, The Pacer cannot "cater" solely to the black students' interests. Viewpoint recognizes the fact that The Pacer cannot cover every black event or print every black article submitted. Viewpoint also recognizes the fact that there are black writers and even black editors on The Pacer staff.

On the other hand there has been a long standing complaint among the black students that even though articles of major interest to them are submitted by these writers, they are either confined to the back page or never printed at all much too often.

The priorities that The Pacer operates gives black news top little attention when compared with the interest black students have in that news. It was largely because of this complaint that led to the idea and reality of Viewpoint.

Additionally, Viewpoint allows any student to express himself personally and creatively, through poetry or prose. Our success in our first issue is more than justification for the struggle to publish it. Again, we appreciate The Pacer's offer of help, and their recognition of our place on this campus. Together, the necessary "niches" will be filled.

Angelo White

He's
There

To the Editor:

I'm a Christian and have been for 10 years. That does not make me a "religious freak" or better than anyone else. I've had troubles, gone through heart aches, and had plenty of depressions. Because I'm a Christian, I'll continue to have "bad experiences" and learn from them.

God has always been there. It's like the couple on a Sunday afternoon ride. The guy was driving with his girl at his side. After a "heated" discussion she was on the passenger side of the car. God is the driver and can't leave the wheel. When we feel separated from God, guess who moved.

God promised never to leave or forsake us. He has always been there and will never leave us. It's up to us to move away from the passenger's seat.

ARS editorial rebutted

I would like to take this opportunity to reply to last week's editorial concerning the Atlanta Rhythm Section's cancellation of their February 3 Concert. What was said about ARS's decision not to come makes no difference to anyone; the band does not read The Pacer and no one on campus cares about your opinion of them. But what was said about SGA's role in the cancellation does matter to me.

To defend what happened that night, I would first like to state that a matter of this nature does not fall into the category of "normal procedure". This was the first time that this had happened to this administration and the promoter were working with. Neither the promoter nor the Cabinet had any idea that ARS was not coming until after the crowd had gathered. When we were notified, there was a small delay, but not because we were acting in a "highly irresponsible and uncompromising manner." We were meeting with our promoter, a representative of the booking agency, the police, and a representative of ARS, trying to rationally and responsibly decide what the best thing was to do in the situation. We were also waiting for a phone call from ARS to get a commitment for another date.

After a decision was made, our promoter decided to make the announcement. As for the stoned girl, I have no idea who she was with and I think that that part of your editorial bordered on the absurd.

All of us did realize the "potential explosiveness" of the situation and, in mild terms, were scared to death.

I do believe that we avoided a lot of hard feelings by waiting a few extra minutes for a commitment from ARS for the next week before telling people that there was not going to be a concert that night. The only ill will felt at this point is by the SGA cabinet toward the Pacer. You do not realize how much time was spent Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday after the cancellation trying to get another show together, acquiring a new opening act, figuring costs and expenses. The majority of the cabinet said to heck with classes those three days because they cared enough to pick up the pieces and start all over.

If any kind of editorial is needed, it is one praising and thanking the people who helped so much after a disappointing and disenchanted weekend.

SGA V.P. Mike Turner and his assistant "Red" Myers worked constantly trying to get the show back on its feet. The information desk staff and Dr. Phillip Watkins and his Secretary Linda Jones were there when we needed them; they all should be

The person responsible for the editorial is the only one who I will not thank. The editorial said nothing positive or constructive. In fact, that editorial was about the only thing that was "highly irresponsible". I'm sorry, but I was disappointed and disgusted by your editorial. You have truly picked a fine way to thank people who worked so hard for credibility this year.

ARS Cancellation Explained

This is in response to the letter in The Pacer last week putting down the SGA because of the ARS cancellation Feb. 3.

First let me turn back the clock to Feb. 3 and go over the events as they happened. Saturday morning Feb. 3 10 a.m., I picked up the road crew at the Jackson Airport, drove them to the fieldhouse where they started to work putting up the P.A. System, lights, etc. Jeff Jackson, ARS road manager informed me the band would be arriving at the Jackson Airport at 4:48 p.m. At the time all was well.

I was at the airport at 3:30 waiting for them to arrive. At 4 p.m. I learned the 4:48 flight was canceled because of heavy fog. The airport officials informed me the band was in Memphis and would be driven to the airport in Jackson. Sammy Ammons, tour manager and Jeff Jackson both phoned me at the airport and said everything was not fine. At 6:05 p.m. I was told the ARS would not be coming for the show. Why, I still don't know. There's only one phone in the fieldhouse. It was busy.

I then drove from Jackson to Martin, got two Security Guards and announced to the crowd what the situation was. (yes I'm the guy with the megaphone that didn't work.) The letter last week said a stoned girl was with me. That's not true. Granted there was a stoned girl running around acting as though she was in charge. She must have come with the sound the light people because she had a stage pass. But she had nothing to do with me. She was hanging on to everybody. But that's not important. Back to why I wrote this.

You say the announcement was not made properly and blamed the SGA. Since I made

Do you remember the days of your youth when you would strike out through shady neighborhoods and desolate alleys for your local movie theatre, and once safely in those confines you would be thrilled by daring adventures of men and woman thrown into dangerous wartime conditions? Well, "Force 10 From Navarone" is a film that tries to recapture those moldy old classics. The bad news is that the film fails to do so.

It's hard to determine where the movie went wrong. The film is based on an Alistair MacLean novel, and it does manage to capture the strengths and weaknesses of that author. It portrays a nicely clipped adventure with lots of double dealing and violence. Also like the author's works, it glosses over most of the characters so that they do not really stand out as people. Most of the characters in the film are superficial stock heroes and villains, except for the traitors who are supposed to be somewhere in between. Since they aren't stock villains and heroes naturally you know that they have to be the traitors.

Part of the fault here seems to be in the screenplay. Though it does manage to capture and desperate pace for the most part that the author's novels delight in, the screenwriter also makes some attempts to lighten the atmosphere with a good deal comic relief. Instead of enhancing the action it detracts from it. Many other of his novels have survived the transition from book to movie, and they have done so by, not lessening the tension that the author had intended.

Another fault lies in the casting. There are lots of name actors here, but very few good ones. The late Robert Shaw gives a good try, as does his co-star Edward Fox. Both actors are excellent in the dramatic situations, but when the mood shifts to the lighter scenes it becomes evident that they feel that the entire thing is rather a lark. If the actors couldn't take the project seriously, then how can the audience?

Franco Nero is a very credible traitor. He's really quite a nice guy. He smiles a lot, buddies up to the underground leaders, and has a tendency to shoot pretty ladies who get in his way. He does manage to treat his role fairly seriously, and because of this his role is one of the better ones in the film.

Harrison Ford, the notorious Han Solo, plays a hard boiled American officer who tends to be single minded about his missions. Ford's performance just doesn't wash. He isn't versatile enough to handle the role, and because of this, his character emerges as even more of a cardboard construct than the script called for. He should be sent back to deep space where all he has to do is blow away Tie Fighters.

Also present are Barbara Bach and Richard Kiel.

escapes from the last big Bond film. The only saving grace to be found for these two, is that they aren't on the screen very long. In the Bond film Kiel didn't talk, and judging from this one he should have kept his silence. Barbara

by Dan Webb

Bach is nice to look at, but it isn't enough. In short, the film simply fails. It didn't seem to be simply a case of bad writing or bad acting. It seemed to be more of a case where nobody cared enough.

Looking at a Reflection

When you look at me and I fail to return your smile or friendly hello.

When my expression mirrors disdain, revulsion, doubt, confusion.

You are only looking at a reflection of you own existence tempered with the honesty that never fails to uncover what's real.

SGA Dateline

by Mark Fowler

Last week's SGA Dateline may have been a little misleading. First of all, there is not, nor has there ever been a split in the SGA cabinet.

Several people have commented on how well this cabinet has worked and the high degree of cooperation among the cabinet members. However, there is also healthy disagreement. Last week's article may have led some to believe that a split had developed or was in the process of developing. This is not the case. Moreover, I think that all of the people in the present cabinet felt very good about what successes we have had and how smoothly the whole affair has gone. Further, I think that the students on campus are generally pleased with the current administration with the possible exception of what happened with Atlanta Rhythm Section, which was not our fault.

So for the record, let me state that last week's article was not a deatribe against the present administration by a disgruntled member. My intention was this: to run a new, different viewpoint up the flag pole and see who would salute. No doubt, some agreed, and some disagreed. But in any event, some dialogue has taken place and this may bring about some new direction in the course of the SGA.

There is one other point I would like to make regarding the last dateline; and that is this: What was printed was simply my opinion and feelings about some issues that SGA ought to address. Perhaps that could have been better addressed in another way. My reason for doing it in this fashion was to create some discussion about SGA among the students in what I felt was the most effective way.

Ultimately, the final choice about which direction SGA should take is up to the students.

February 11

11:20 p.m. Officer Starsky gave a warning to a student motorist concerning a moving violation. However, the student insisted that he was transferring to UTM, and could move his possessions any time he wanted.

February 9
12:15 a.m. Officer Hutch finally solved the stolen pizza caper, by sneaking into the headquarters of the conspirators, disguised as a piece of canadian bacon. Twenty-three stolen pizzas, by now stale and worthless, were recovered. These may be claimed by applying at the Lost and Found.

February 10
10:30 p.m. Officer Starsky responded to a false fire alarm at Austin Peay Hall, and also successfully put out the false fire which was falsely flaming away in the trash chute.

12:00 noon. Officers Starsky and Hutch enjoyed a meal at Kappi's Steak House. In the meantime, their souped-up police car was successfully dismantled and put on blocks in the parking lot. No suspects were reported.

February 12
3:00 p.m. Officer Hutch transported several sick students from the Student Health Center to a "place with real doctors and nurses" as Hutch put it.

February 13
5:00 p.m. Officer Starsky responded to an attempted suicide at The Pacer office. Aaron Hughey, the editor-in-chief, was reportedly trying to meet deadline requirements, which medical reports affirm is a sure-fire way to go early. Starsky talked him out of depression, commenting that he liked the paper, and other such lies.

UTM Book Buy Back discussed

'Rip-off' Investigated

Ask any student at UTM about book buy back and you'll probably get a two word response, "rip-off". Well this might be the case in some instances but let's look at the facts.

After interviewing Mr. Jerry Carpenter, director of the bookstore, and Vice-Chancellor Gross, the following facts were brought to the surface. Let's say the bookstore buys a book for $8.00 from the publisher and sells it for $10.00. Now, once the freight and shipping cost is paid by the bookstore, they make a 2-3% profit and that's it. The bookstore will buy-back this book for half the original cost which is the going rate on most all college campuses. Now this originally $10.00 book which was bought back for $5.00 will then again be sold for $7.50, which is considerably cheaper than a new book. This used $7.50 book will then again be bought back for the $5.00 which was the same price given for the $10.00 book, so fact it, buy used books. But that's not the point we're trying to get across here. Mr. Carpenter has gone as far as Nebraska and Chicago to buy used books so the students won't have to buy new ones. When books do become outdated, say in the business field, new books have to be bought. But in some cases, let's say the English department, the freshman book by McCrimmon was outdated 3 years before the faculty ordered new books. This was because the faculty and Mr. Carpenter didn't want the students to have to buy new books after such a short term use of the old ones.

Vice-Chancellor Gross was quick to admit that the bookstore doesn't make a killing. The entire store itself operates year round on only a 5% profit, and this is for the entire store, not just the book buy back.

Whether the student knows it or not, the UTM bookstore tries it's best to serve the students as fairly as possible. Who knows, maybe some day an even fairer system of book buying can be found.

TM debated

Author's Critic

by K. Paul Jones

In reading the latest Pacer, I was struck by the contrast between the impressive, careful reasoning in the column by Danny Lamb and David Stacey versus the confused reasoning of Robert Whitfield and Paul Francis in their guest column on "The truth about TM?"

Most of their column is a carefully reasoned criticism of TM's misleading advertising. Whitfield and Francis assert that TM is not a science; it is a religion. It is a religion because our courts have said so and because its origins can be traced back to its Hindu founder. It is not a science because "independent studies" by university scholars have shown that simple rest and (non-transcendental) meditation are the real causes for the relief from stress and anxiety supposedly obtained from TM. If they had ended their column at this point, I would have no argument against the logic of their attack on TM.

The problem, however, is that the include a final paragraph which contradicts their previous criticism of TM and which reveals the real reason for their hostility. In the last paragraph they let the cat out of the bag. They are not opposed to TM because it is a religion rather than a science. They are opposed to TM because it is not part of their religion which, of course, is also not a science. Their claim, therefore, that "fulfillment" can be obtained by believing in their god is susceptible to the same critique they make of TM's claims. Neither Whitfield and Francis nor the TMs can point to any "independent studies" which verify their assertions. In fact, if they asked Dr. Jonathan Smith for his opinion, I suspect he would use the same words quoted by Whitfield and Francis: "Simply sitting with one's eyes close, buoyed by the exception of eventual relief brings about exactly the same results".

At Twenty-seven

At six I felt someone was there...I gave up my security diaper to ride a bicycle.
At seven, I patched up a quarrel with my best friend.
At eight, I was beaten up for giving roses to a supposed witch.
At nine, I fell into a creek and broke my jaw while my friends laughed and didn't attempt to help me.
At ten, I was informed that a person I loved very much was a whore.
At eleven, I was frightened.
At twelve, I was even more frightened because my body and being wouldn't fit into the proverbial mold.
At thirteen and fourteen, I tried desperately to fit.
At fifteen, I went away to school to escape...and that didn't work either.
At sixteen and seventeen, I suffered a great deal although I can't remember exactly why.
At eighteen, life was open to me through a world of drugs and alcohol...I thought I was finally "there".
At twenty, I married.
At twenty-one, I divorced.
At twenty-two, I was still unhappy and remarried.
At twenty-three, I was travelling across country to find myself...divorced.
At twenty-four, remarried and a son.
At twenty-five, divorced...still a son.
At twenty-six, my son and I are maturing.
At twenty-seven, my son has my expectation, and I learned to ride a bicycle!

KA's 'Pack Your Bags' party slated for March 1

By BILL ROGERS
Staff Writer

Kappa Alpha Order's second annual "Pack Your Bags" Disco-Beer Bust for Muscular Dystrophy will be held Thursday night March 1, at the Hourglass from eight till 12, Jim Lambert, chairman of the event, said.

Tickets are five dollars a couple and can be purchased from any KA or KA Little sister.

"One hundred percent of the proceeds go to Muscular Dystrophy to help 'Jerry's kids'," Lambert said.

Lambert reported that KA raised $1000 for Muscular Dystrophy last year.

"We're shooting for $1500 this year; but, of course, we'd like to see much more," Lambert said.

Tickets entitle the holders to all the beer they can drink, dancing, and a chance at lots of door prizes, Lambert stated.

Prizes include posters, T-shirts, hats, decorative bar lamps, and the Grand prize: a weekend trip for two to New Orleans and $100 spending money.

"The grand prize winners will fly from Memphis to New Orleans Friday afternoon and return home Sunday afternoon," Lambert said.

Lambert said the winners will stay at the Marriott Hotel located in the French Quarter where they will be given a choice of tours of the city and also "a chance to just explore on their own."

Susan Roberson, last year's grand prize winner, said she almost did not buy a ticket.

"I wasn't going to buy one, but my boyfriend finally talked me into it," Roberson said.

Roberson said she could not believe it when her number was read out as the winner of the trip.

"I just freaked out; I ran and called my parents to tell them I had won the trip and they thought I was pulling their leg," Roberson said.

Roberson said the trip was both enjoyable and interesting.

"The rooms at the hotel were very nice and mine had a beautiful view of the Mississippi River. All the interesting places were within walking distance and some were very 'unique.' It was great," Roberson said.

Roberson found most of the restaurants and bars expensive and suggested that this year's winners carry some extra money.

"Including the $100 given to me, I ended up spending about $160," Roberson said.

Additional tickets will be available at booths set up in the University Center all next week.

Tickets are also available at the T-room and the Next Door, Lambert said.

This year, KA is offering a free keg of beer to the Greek letter organization—social, service, or professional—with the highest percentage of tickets bought, Lambert said.

"Be sure and tell the ticket salesman the name of your organization when you buy a ticket so we can keep count on the organizations," Lambert said.

"We hope everyone will come on down to the hourglass, have a fantastic time and help 'Jerry's kids' in the process," Lambert said.

Business With 'Biz'

Barbara "Biz" Van Gelder addresses listeners at her presentation on federal election dollars. Van Gelder has been with the Federal Election Commission since 1977.

Van Gelder speaks on campaign money

By FRED MAXWELL
Special Assignments Editor

Barbara Van Gelder, executive assistant to Commissioner John McGarry on the Federal Election Commission, spoke to Political Science classes Feb. 15.

She spoke on political dollars contributed to campaigns.

"In the 1976 presidential election, people were anxious to donate," Van Gelder said. She said that the presidential election, the first under the law since FEC began in April, 1974, was fairly successful in terms of the campaign spending laws.

More than $30 million was spent by the commission to publicly finance the elections, she said.

Although the campaign saw public financing of federal elections successfully instituted, she said that now many candidates are going to really strive to getting more money into their campaign chests.

In one case, she used Pennsylvania Governor Milton Shapp as an example. Shapp, Van Gelder said, was relatively well known, but not west of the Mississippi as east of it. She said that he had a friend of a friend who offered to get some more money for the campaign. This friend donated $2,000 so that Shapp had enough money to qualify for matching funds. But they overpaid him and he had to send some of the money back.

Van Gelder said that FEC is very careful about money and has some rigid formulas for its distribution.

For example, to qualify for primary matching funds, a person had to have at least $5000 from individuals in 20 states. And the individuals are limited to $250 per person per candidate.

Also, according to an FEC pamphlet certain kinds of contributions and money from certain sources are taboo.

For example, funds taken from national bank treasuries as well as labor organizations, Foreign nationals who are not permanent residents of the U.S. are not permitted to give to campaigns and nobody is allowed to give anything in cash more than a $100.

A favorite gimmick used to be for a person to donate campaign funds in another person's name. FEC does not allow such practice.

UAC to begin its annual membership drive Feb. 27

The Undergraduate Alumni Council will begin its annual membership drive on Feb. 20. We invite all interested members of organizations to apply.

The purpose of the UAC is to offer services to the undergraduates, alumni, and prospective students of the University, with special emphasis placed on the stimulation and participation of students in the progress of this institution.

During the past year, the Undergraduate Alumni Council has participated in and/or sponsored the following events: MayFest, our annual Activities Fair, High School Visitation Day, Campus Clean-up, the ROTC Drill Meet, Parents' Day, Homecoming, special projects for various community groups, a recruitment program in co-operation with the Admissions Office, the Weekend Information Center, a fund raising project for the Student Emergency Loan Fund, and tours, tours, tours!

To be eligible for membership in the Undergraduate Alumni Council, a student must be enrolled as a full-time student at least two quarters prior to the quarter of application and must have a 2.00 grade average.

Applications may be obtained at the University Center Information Desk between Feb. 20 and March 15, 1979. They should be returned to the Alumni Office in the Administration Building, Room 329, or to Becky Frizzell (G-H 123) no later than 4:00 p.m. on March 15. All applicants will be contacted for an interview within the first two weeks of spring quarter.

Although membership in the UAC is limited to 30, anyone interested is encouraged to apply.

An 'invite' to snack on some flapjacks

Would you like to have a meal ready and prepared for you when you get off work or out of class one day? Tuesday, Feb. 27 you can get a prepared meal just a few feet from the UTM campus.

The St. John's Episcopal Church is holding its annual Shrove Tuesday Pancake Supper from 5 to 7 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 27. Tickets are $1.75 for adults and $1 for children under 12. For larger families there is a special price of $5.

If you don't want to cook that night or you just like pancakes come and join the crowd to help raise money for charity.

Food for the Pancake Supper is being donated by Martin Merchants including IGA, Big Star, Wal-Mart and Ben Franklin's.

The Gamma Sigma Sigma Service Sorority is assisting in the preparation of the Pancake Supper.

Housing contests...

The deadline is noon on March 7, 1979.

The essay should be 500-1000 words long, typed or neatly handprinted, and double spaced. The entrant's name, address and classification should appear at the end of the essay. The judge's decisions will be final.

"Anyone who is interested in helping us out can contact me at the Housing Office," said Belote.

A dormitory reduction contest is already underway. The dormitory showing the most decrease in its utility rates for Feb. 1-May 15, 1979 will win a free cookout compliments of the Housing Department.

"Anyone who is interested in helping us out can contact me at the Housing Office," said Belote.

Medical and law students want to preserve 'ethics'

By RICHARD MEISLER

Professions like medicine and law claim to be committed to high ideals of public service. Yet the vast majority of lawyers, doctors and other professionals do not live up to those ideals. They sell their services to the individuals and corporations that can pay top dollar.

People who are poor and ideas that are poorly-funded have to settle for inferior professional assistance or none at all. There is, however, a small but promising movement among law students and young lawyers that provides an interesting model for how professionals may devote some of their time and money to public service.

The Public Interest Law Foundation (PILF) has just been started by students at the New York University (NYU) Law School. Members pledge a portion of their yearly earnings to PILF. The money will be used to give legal support to public interest cases or movements.

NYU professor Lewis Kornhauser had experience in a similar organization as a law student in California, and he is on the board of directors of the NYU PILF.

He explained to me that PILF money will be used to pay lawyers to work on projects involving important theoretical or practical issues in the public domain. Environmental protection, civil liberties, welfare rights, government abuses and women's rights are all possible areas of PILF involvement.

Sylvia Law, another NYU professor and PILF board member, has devoted her entire professional life to public interest law. As a university-based lawyer, she has been able to make important contributions in the fields of health law and welfare rights.

But Professor Law points out that only a few lawyers can be supported by universities or foundations. The vast majority must enter the legal marketplace to earn their living.

Most lawyers, therefore, must work in the standard money-making fields: tax law, commercial law, real estate transactions, damage and insurance cases and domestic law. Professor Law thinks that the PILF profit-sharing concept provides lawyers with an opportunity to contribute to the public interest while nevertheless dealing with the current financial realities of their profession.

PILF groups will almost certainly be started at other law schools. After only a few months, the NYU group has 129 members and $20,000 in pledges.

This young movement demonstrates quite clearly that the professions and the educational establishment that supports them do not necessarily require idealistic young men and women to abandon their social ethics.

Dairy farm cows enrolled in hay and hull experiment

By MARCELLA STRAND
Staff Writer

Twenty-four dairy cows at the UTM dairy farm are enrolled in a sixteen week experiment to determine the effects of hay and pelleted cottonseed hulls as a source of dietary fiber on milk production and its fat content, according to E.W. Culvahouse, associate professor of dairying and project director.

"Feeding routines have changed in the last ten years," Culvahouse said. "Complete blended rations is one answer to decrease labor costs. This is especially important because adverse weather conditions often are a problem to harvesting hay," he said.

The 12 Jerseys and 12 Holsteins are assigned to the respective treatments at random within age and breed. All the animals get corn silage. For roughage, eight get hay, eight get pelleted cottonseed hulls with a grain mixture, and eight get unpelleted hulls with grain mixture.

"We weigh each cow every two weeks," Culvahouse said. "Milk production is compared as well as the percentage of butterfat after each milking."

The animals are milked at 3:30 a.m. and again at 3:30 p.m., according to Ron Blair of Millington, senior, and Brian Signaigo of Memphis, senior, both animal science majors at UTM assigned to the project.

"Each animal is fed individually and the amount is recorded," Blair said. "The cows are allowed to exercise twice a day."

This experiment will be completed by April 1, and results will be available from local extension agents soon after.

During year abroad

Lannom tastes Germany

By FRED MAXWELL
Special Assignments Editor

Danny Lannom, UTM graduate, Rotary Fellow, and former president of the UTM Political Science Club, found one German university to be a Mecca for political activism and beer drinking unity.

Lannom, who spent last year on a fellowship in Germany, dropped by The Pacer office to share some of his experiences. He will do that again next Thursday evening March 1 in the University Center, according to Dr. George Kao, political science club faculty advisor. The Political Science club is sponsoring the lecture.

Arriving in Germany in 1977, Lannom said he experienced no real culture shock as most people would.

"I had to learn something of the bureaucracy to know what forms had to be filled out and what offices to visit, but I had no real cultural shock because I had people who helped me out," Lannom said.

Although he experienced no culture shock, he did note some differences between German and American university students.

"They are much more politicized," Lannom said.

He explained that students were heavily organized into political groups with concerns ranging from campus issues to those affecting the nation. They range from a communist leaning to the Christian Democrats, which Lannom said is a right wing organization.

Lannom, who is entering law school this term, had his share of organization—mostly classwork. The classes were on what he called a semester system, and he took 20 hours of work. He attended the Darmstadt Technological University as well as another school where he had refresher courses in language. Most of his work was done at Darmstadt.

There were two kinds of classes, Lannom said, lecture and seminar classes. He explained that in a lecture class, students simply attended class and took notes. In the seminar classes—"a very demanding class"—according to Lannom, students held discussions, did lots of assigned reading, and wrote term papers. Neither type of class involved testing. Each met for one and a half hours about once a week and students were pretty much on their own.

"They don't have grades such as we do here. The grades students over there have come from tests taken during the middle and at the end of their studies," Lannom said. And the seminar classes had their own requirements for you even to be certified to take the test.

"It's hard to say, but I think students over there think that grades given at the end of the quarter are more pressure than those given at the end of the middle and at the end of their studies," Lannom said when asked if he thought the German way of grading eased pressure on the students to make progress.

Living in dormitories in Germany had its own brand of strangeness, according to Lannom.

"The dorms are on the other side of town," he said.

His dorm was more like an apartment where four students shared two private bedrooms, kitchen and bath facilities.

"It was a very nice situation," Lannom said, and added that it made for maximum contact with the students. He said that if he needed to have help translating something, he could get help from one of the better speakers of German. And when they needed something translated into English, they asked him. It was a mutually satisfactory way of working he said.

When students in Darmstadt got together, it was probably at what we would call the University Center.

"Darmstadt had two campuses" Lannom said, one side handling the chemistry, architecture, and biology while the other campus handled everything else. It was an extensive school of more than 10,000 students.

Each campus had its own university center.

"They were more just cafeterias and offices for student services, no TV rooms and all that," Lannom said.

Talk turned to food, since university centers served that over there. Lannom said there were two or three lunch lines, for example. They each served different meals.

"All you did was pick the line according to which meal you thought you liked the best," Lannom said.

He indicated too that lunch was rather cheap, costing around 80 cents. A typical lunch consisted of roast beef, potatoes, soup, and salad.

"You could get bottle of beer sold just like coke. During lunch, you could get beer from the tap in the lunch line," Lannom said.

"I told one of my friends that we couldn't legally have beer on campus (at UTM), and they thought that incomprehensible," Lannom stated.

Lannom concluded by saying that he wanted to thank the people at Rotary International for selecting him for the fellowship.

New newspaper

BSA to fund Viewpoint

By RUSSELL HEASTON
Staff Writer

The Black Student Association has agreed to fund the newly organized black student newspaper, according to the Phyllis Jacox, vice-president of the BSA.

"The paper, named The Viewpoint has had one issue, and the next one will probably come out next week," Jacox said.

Angelo White is the editor-in-chief of The Viewpoint. Thomas DeBerry will take responsibilities as co-editor, and Russell Heaston was named news-director.

Gina Kilgore was appointed features editor along with Diane Peterson, organization editor; Michael Jones, editorials; Herbert Harding, business manager; and Yolanda Blakely, press consultant.

"The purpose of the paper is to give black students a chance to use their writing skills and to reveal news events that are of black interest," Jacox stated. "Due to the lack of experience, the first paper was similar to a news letter, however it should start going to press later in the year."

The idea came from Gina

Kilgore and Diane Peterson, both freshmen from Memphis who were surprised that UTM did not have a black newspaper. The idea was presented to Thomas DeBerry, a journalism major and other residents of Atrium suite 4-K. The idea was later presented to Dean Harold T. Conner, Elmer Martin, secretary of minority affairs, along with Michael McCrimmon and the BSA members.

Other executive council members for The Viewpoint include: Michael Robinson, Reginald Smith and Donna Ware.

The Viewpoint welcomes all interested black students to become staff writers and typists.

The BSA sponsored the Black Athlete Appreciation day Monday, Feb. 12, in the University Center. Speeches were given by athletes in acceptance. Charlotte Doaks of the Lady Pacers was presented the Most Popular Black Athlete Award. Earl LeFlore was runner-up for the award. Other certificates, plaques and trophies were presented along with refreshments.

The speaker for Black History Week was Leo Gray, director of the Sickle Cell Foundation. He presented a very inspiring message to the small group that attended. His speech was for the students to realize what they are in school to work to their utmost potentials.

The Collegiate Choir concert scheduled for Friday, Feb. 16, has been reslated to a later date.

"The BSA would like to thank the students that did participate in our sponsored activities last week, however we felt that many of our black students failed to show interest in many events," Jacox said.

Gamma Sig sorority active with events for this week

By BEVERLY BOMER
Assistant News Editor

Gamma Sigma Sigma service sorority is active this quarter with events for the public to get involved in.

Last Tuesday night the sorority held their fourth annual chili supper. It was held in the University Center Ballroom at 6 p.m. with an admission of $1.50. From 150-200 people attended, a total of $360 was made at the door, with proceeds going to the special olympics.

"The supper went over very well. We did not make as much as we did last year, but we're still proud of what we did make," Sandy Dysinger, treasurer of Gamma Sigma Sigma, stated.

"We're looking forward to continuing this for an annual event," she said.

The sorority planned many events for this week. A rush was held on Tuesday and Wednesday nights at 7 p.m. in the University Center.

"We have no restrictions as far as race and age are concerned. Anybody who wants to give service to the community, college or other organizations can be accepted to Gamma Sig," Dysinger stated.

The sorority is selling M&M candy this week also. The price is 50 cents for a large movie box.

On Saturday, Feb. 24 at 10:30-11:30, the Gamma Sigs will be sponsoring a "story hour." This is entertainment movies and running games for children from 3-10 years of age.

Pacers begin stretch run of a disappointing season

By DANIEL SCATES
Sports Writer

The UTM Pacers are heading down the stretch run of their 1978-79 basketball season.

Even though it was another disappointing week as two more losses were registered, the week ended with a victory over Columbia College Monday night by a score of 77-60.

Don Hubbard led the Pacer scoring attack with 17 points, and made a jumper with 8:12 left to give UTM the lead for good at 52-50. UTM trailed, 41-40 at the half. Ed Littleton pitched in 15 points to aid the Pacer cause, and Jim Ogle of Columbia was high point man in the game, with 22.

The Pacer's problem in the other two games was that they could not put two good halves together. Thursday against North Alabama, UTM ran up a nine point lead in the first half only to have the Lions come blistering back to take a one point halftime lead. The strong bench of North Alabama was just too much to overcome in the second half as UNA rolled up the final score of 92-75.

Don Hubbard was the leading scorer once again with a career high of 28 points, followed by Jim Bradley with 20 and John Carr with 10.

Saturday night the first half proved to be the undoing of UTM against Mississippi College. MC ran up a 38-28 lead, but UTM made a courageous comeback to fall short by a score of 83-78. Hubbard had 21 and Bradley had 20 to lead the scoring.

UTM now stands at 7-17 overall and 2-12 in the Gulf South Conference.

UTM will close out the season this weekend with games on Friday against Jacksonville state, and on Saturday against Troy State. Tipoff for both games will be 7:30 at the P.E. Complex.

'Roving ski into madcaps' adventure

By SUZIE BRONK
Staff Writer

As the curtain rises and the lights dim, it's time for another adventure with those "roving madcaps" of the Adventure Club.

The Adventure Club had returned to their old haunt of Beech Mountain, North Carolina. Their day of skiing went without broken bones again, but many falls were seen.

"We had a chance to go night skiing on this trip," said Kenny Allen, president of the club.

"The slopes looked really nice all lit up. We also went ice skating, which was a change of pace."

The price of the trip was $50. Not as many members went on this trip so the group rates did not apply.

"We almost got snowed in before we could get home. There were seven inches on the ground and the roads were very slick when we left," Allen said. The trip, in Allen's words, was another success for the group of travelling explorers.

"We are still planning on going hang gliding during the Spring Quarter. We are also planning on backpacking trips during next quarter," he said. A canoe trip is being planned for spring break but the final arrangements are not finished yet.

Anyone who is interested in joining the club on any of their trips should contact Kenny Allen. All are welcome.

"We are trying to do new things. We would like to go parachuting, if we can find a place," Allen stated.

Lady Pacer BASKETBALL

Turn It Loose!

Sports Spectrum

By JANIE MILLER
Sports Editor

Alack and alas, 'tis once again late February, the month of valentines and tallied score sheets. Unfortunately, this February also means broken hearts for the UTM basketball squad.

With two games remaining in the season, the Pacers hold a 7-17 overall record, and a 2-12 standing in the Gulf South Conference. Alack and alas, maybe it's a good thing that it's late February and the season's almost over.

Then again, that is unfair criticism of a team racked by injuries to key players, and playing with a very young, mostly inexperienced squad.

This is not meant to be an excuse for the basketball team; the Pacers don't need any excuses. Besides, they're all bigger than I am, and perfectly capable of standing up for themselves. However, these are the facts, and that's the way the basketball bounces.

Also in the process of winding up a season are the Lady Pacers. Their record is now 9-12, after a loss to MTSU, 73-69, last night.

The Lady Pacers' final game is here, Feb. 24, at 1:00 P.M. against Eastern Illinois University. According to Bettye Giles, Director of Women's Athletics, the match is free to all University employees and community friends, and your attendance will give the team a morale boost.

A boost that's always helpful, no matter when it comes, so get on out and support your favorite Pacer teams, and be proud of the fact that we have them.

Moving right along, all of you early morning, athletically inclined people who just happened to be over at the PE Complex last Saturday morning got a chance to see the UTM Strike Force in action.

For those of you that missed it, the action consisted of wall rappelling from the jogging track to the main floor, followed by helicopter rappels from the catwalk up near the ceiling approximately 70 feet down to the floor.

According to observers, it was an interesting sight to see. Personally, I think it was even more interesting standing on the outside of the catwalk, connected by a pair of ropes wrapped around a metal oval called a snaplink, trying to figure out where on the three-inch wide ledge to put your feet without slipping!

Now a brief message from Randy Dodd, resident writer and outdoorsman: There will be a meeting of all coon hunters in the area at Gibson County Courthouse in Trenton, tonight at 7:00 p.m.

State Representative Ray Davis of Milan will be present to discuss legislation which affects coon hunting in Gibson County. All coon hunters and interested persons are urged to attend.

Also, anyone with furs or hides to sell should do so immediately. The deadline for buying fur is around March 1, and the prices are dropping steadily.

The Recreational Sports department is making plans for more activities in the "All-Niter" area. In the fall of next year, the possibility of a "Fall-Niter" is being discussed, with different activities scheduled in the PE Complex until midnight.

The second annual "All-Niter" may make an appearance next winter quarter, from 8:00 p.m. to 8:00 a.m., complete with even more, and varied, activities. This will probably be followed by a "Spring-Niter", another half-the-night jamboree.

All of the "Nitters" will have different activities, and probably some repeats of the more popular pastimes. Provided that Bob Neilson and his hard-working, quick-witted staff can come up with such variety, and even if they can't, it sounds like next year in Recreational Sports will be an exciting one!

'Red-legged' spider proves unusual pet

By SUSIE STEPHENS
Staff Writer

Children sing of the itsy-bitsy spider that went up the water spout. However, Rex Paschall, Puryear senior at UTM, has no interest in itsy-bitsy spiders. Not when he can play with a four-inch long, fuzzy red-legged tarantula.

Paschall, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Winfred Paschall of Rt. 2, Puryear, bought his pet last Christmas as a gag gift for June Rasmussen, a senior from Bluff City. And, although she has since grown fond of the spider, Rasmussen had no desire to keep the fuzzy-legged gift. So, Paschall decided to keep it for himself.

"The decision to keep the tarantula was one of the best ones I have made," he says. "Besides being an unusual and interesting pet, it is a good topic for conversation and helps me meet people."

The senior business administration major admits there are several unexpected advantages to owning the only domestic tarantula on campus.

"Whenever I want to watch a certain program on the television in the dormitory lobby, I just bring the spider with me," he said. "And for some mysterious reason, I always get to watch whatever

I want on the set."

According to Paschall, the tarantula is a safe, clean and economical pet.

"Tarantulas are friendly and mild-mannered. It is extremely clean and only cost me $1.79 last year for some special food." Paschall's tarantula lives in a bubble terrarium and eats almost anything live he feeds it.

Except humans.

"The tarantula is the most misunderstood spider there is because of its size and appearance," he says. "It will only eat living things like grasshoppers, other spiders, and flies. Its bite is perfectly harmless to humans."

The tarantula is a native of the hot, dry climate of the southwestern states. According to Rex, the more common brown-legged variety cost about $12.

"Mine is of the less-common, red-legged variety," he says, "and it cost me a little more." He paid $20 for his unusual pet.

Just as the itsy-bitsy spider continues to climb up the water spout and fascinate children, Rex Paschall's tarantula will continue to fascinate students, faculty and staff at UT Martin and make new friends for him wherever he takes it.

Spring fashions are 'contrasting' styles

By FAYE SCATES
Staff Writer

Sophisticated by day, dazzling by night is the spring fashion forecast according to McCall's beauty editor.

Neat, clean lines and very feminine body-conscious clothes have replaced the tossed-on, slouchy garments of past seasons.

"Many designers have taken their inspiration from fashions worn several generations ago, but the new clothes do not mark a return to the past," the beauty editor stated. "The beauty editor stated, 'Oscar de la Renta, famous designer, says there is nothing 'retro' about these clothes."

"They're just made the way good clothes used to be. It's long overdue," he said.

The suit, still the winning daytime look, is more elegant than ever. Even the woman who resisted buying a suit last fall may find herself wearing one this spring.

We should look for short narrow jackets and slim, figure-flattering skirts. The leading designers agree that suits will look better nipped in at the

High Flier

'He'd rather be flying'

By MARCELLA STRAND
Staff Writer

Like most college professors, Dr. LeeRoy W. Kiesling, associate professor and chairman of Occupational Education at UTM, believes in higher education. His hobby is flying Cessna 150 and 172 airplanes.

Dr. Kiesling's hobby stems from a life-long desire to "do something different."

In the early 1950's while attending San Angelo Junior College in Texas, he found the life of a rodeo clown to his liking. In 1962, still looking for something different to challenge him, Dr. Kiesling became a football official. For the next 15 years he served as a high school football official in Texas, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Kentucky.

His interest in flying dates back to 1958 when he scraped to gether enough money for an introductory flight lesson.

"It was something I always wanted to do. However, a lack of time and money kept me grounded."

Dr. Kiesling came to UT Martin in 1975.

"I found the money and made the time to take flying lessons from Lloyd Butler, a former chief flight instructor with Taylor Aviation at Everett-Stewart Airport in Union City.

"The first time I soloed, it was really exciting," he said. "To realize that a hunk of metal could keep me up in the air is something to think about." He has been flying for about three years.

Dr. Kiesling says his hobby is both safe and exciting.

"Flying gives one the greatest feeling of freedom.

Learning to fly is much more exciting than learning to drive a car and, in most respects, just as safe," Le said.

Wife Betty and their three children, Suzy, 21, Debby, 18, and Russell, 17, have all flown with the college professor.

Most of his flights are for sightseeing over West Tennessee.

"Everyone wants to see UTM, Reelfoot Lake, and the Mississippi River from the air," Kiesling said.

Fairy dust and fantasy; Peter Pan comes to UT

By JENNIFER GUTHRIE
Staff Writer

"O.K. - in position everybody. Be who you are. On your mark...get set...go!"

William Snyder, the stage director, leans back in his swivel chair, placed in front of the stage, and takes notes while quietly watching. The stage manager sits behind him, play book in hand.

This rehearsal contrasts the ones held the past weeks in the small blackroom across the hall. There under the hot glaring lights the play came alive! A trunk and a few barrels were the only props used. Snyder gave directions; walking through the parts, describing the scene, how to look, how to react when, where, and how to move. Scenes and parts of scenes were rehearsed over and over and over again.

"This is the most technical play I've ever been in," said Jimmy Brewil, the theater consultant and also known as John in the play.

"Everything has to be perfect - even to where your feet are," he said.

At the end of Scene III the guys quickly change sets on stage. That done, they pause to relax for a few minutes. "You really have to enjoy it and be dedicate to it," said Jeff Caveness, a Pirate "because you don't get any credit for it or any pay," he stated.

"There's physical hard work as well as mental."

"O.K. If we're ready, let's go!" Snyder yells. Everyone in the next act takes their places behind or on stage and there is silence. "Curtains...lights...sound..." And they begin. Those not in the play watch intently, waiting for their cue.

Acting in a play is nothing new for many of the people in "Peter Pan." They are familiar with the hard work, effort, and time that is spent on the production. "I like to have fun at rehearsals," said Scott Crawford, alias Captain Hook. The night rehearsals to many have proved tiring at times, but Randy Flippin, Captain Hook's right-hand pirate named Smee, said he hadn't had enough of them! "The play is fun and that's why I do it!"

Although Peggy Sorrells has never acted before, she was acquainted with the stage last quarter as assistant stage manager of the play "No Place to be Somebody." This time she is surly, one of the lost boys in "Peter Pan." For "She" to become "he" requires much concentration.

UTM receives grant for student training program

UTM has received a $13,020 grant from the National Science Foundation to conduct a summer training program for high school juniors with high abilities in science.

Dr. Ernie Blythe, associate professor of geology and campus project director, said 30 students will be selected from among applicants to study energy resources June 18-July 20. UT Martin has been selected to participate in the student research program for the past six years.

"This program is a study of energy resources with an emphasis on chemistry, physics, and geology," Blythe said. "In the past, students involved with the NSF program have thoroughly enjoyed it."

"Participants are grouped according to individual interests and are given the opportunity to conduct individual research," he said.

Previous NSF programs have consisted of discussions, laboratory training and research, and field trips to coal strip mines, steam power plants, and hydroelectric facilities.

Tuition for the program is free. However, students must pay for room, board, travel to and from the campus, and for all personal expenses.

Application forms and additional information are available from the department of geosciences and physics, 587-7430.

SREB report complete

Black representation low

Black representation on college faculties in the South's public institutions continues to be low, compared to the black share of the region's total population and of college enrollment, according to a recent survey by the Southern Regional Education Board (SREB).

Partially supported by the Ford Foundation, the SREB survey of full-time faculty in Southern public higher education concludes that "it will be very difficult to increase black representation on college faculties in the region" until there is an increase in the number of advanced degrees earned by blacks in the South and until black graduate students become more widely dispersed among disciplines other than education.

The SREB study also concludes that even if only a small portion of the pool of new black doctorates takes jobs in industry and government or in two-year colleges, "the remainder would not be sufficient to maintain the present level of black representation in four-year institutions, much less to increase it."

Here are some of the highlights of SREB's report.

Eight percent of the total faculty in the South's public institutions is black, compared to a black share of 18.8 percent of the South's population and 15.1 percent of Southern college enrollment.

The most striking concentration of black faculty comes in the field of education—one-sixth of all teacher education faculty in the South's four-year public institutions are black, and one-third of all black faculty in these colleges and universities teach education subjects.

Blacks are relatively well represented among faculty in library science, home economics, and public affairs (which includes social work).

Blacks have lower than average representation in architecture, accounting, engineering, and the physical sciences.

Almost three-fourths of the black faculty in the region's four-year public institutions are employed in the predominantly black institutions.

A black faculty member is less likely to be tenured, to hold the rank of full professor, and to have earned a doctorate, than is a white faculty member.

Over all four-year public colleges and universities in the South, doctorates are held by 37 percent of black faculty, compared to 65 percent of total faculty.

The representation of black faculty in two-year institutions (7.2 percent of total faculty) is even lower than in four-year institutions, despite the fact that blacks comprise a greater proportion of total enrollment in two-year than in four-year schools.

The report compared data on new doctorates against the survey's results for areas where blacks show underrepresentation on Southern faculties, and concludes that "the number of such degrees earned by blacks in the Southern region is not sufficient to augment the current representation of blacks on the faculties of the region."

Dr. Galambos notes that the situation is "aggravated by the fact that 75 percent of all degrees earned by blacks in the region at the master's and doctoral levels are in the field on education—a discipline in which black faculty representation is much higher than average, and in which enrollments are declining.

The SREB survey includes data on the race and discipline of 97,000 four-year and 35,000 two-year full-time faculty members in the 14 Southern states for 1976-78. Four-year institutions were grouped according to the racial composition of their student bodies: (1) white (less than 5 percent black enrollment); (2) black (80 to 100 percent black enrollment); and (3) substantially integrated (all other). By this classification, 51 percent of all four-year faculty work in "substantially integrated" institutions; 41 percent, at "white" institutions; and 8 percent, at "black" institutions. (See Figure 1, back of page one.)

As noted in the highlights above, there is a high concentration of black faculty in teacher education—twice as many faculty than the average black representation in all fields of study. (See Figure 2, back of page two.)

Among these other disciplines, there are important variations within sub-fields. For example, among the social sciences, there is greater black representation in sociology and history than in economics. In engineering, there are considerably more black faculty in engineering technologies than for the field as a whole. The same is true for

Winter Wonderland scheduled

By DOROTHY BOCK
Copy Editor

Winter Wonderland, an annual disco, sponsored by all the residence halls will be held on Feb. 24 from 8-12 p.m. in the University Center Ballroom.

The theme this year is "Love is in the air," and all residence halls are contributing something which follows the theme.

This event is different than most in that the girls ask the guys to go with them. Tickets are $1 a person and everyone is urged to attend.

Dress is formal-semi formal because disco music will be featured.

Proceeds will go to the special olympics.

'American Farm' coming to UTM

The Tennessee Committee for the Humanities has approved a grant to UTM which will make possible our having for three weeks "The American Farm", a large photographic history exhibit of American farm life.

The display will be on campus in late April and early May and will coincide with the annual History Roundtable which will be partially funded by the grant and which will also concern American and Tennessee farm life.

In addition to the California Historical Society's "The American Farm", there will be a photographic section call-secretarial studies as compared to the entire field of business and management. Nursing, a subfield of the health professions, has a greater representation of black faculty than is true for the field in its entirety. (See Table 1, on back of page three.)

The increasing number of blacks earning master's degrees may provide a supply whereby black representation might be strengthened in the region's two-year colleges, where a master's degree is the norm for faculty. Another recent SREB report, Degree Output by Race, showed a concentration in teacher education reaching 75 percent of the 8,900 master's degrees earned by blacks—leaving only 2,200 degrees available across all other disciplines; one-fifth of those are in public affairs (including social work), another field in which blacks are already strongly represented.

Dr. Galambos notes that the market for college faculty is a national one, so that supply of faculty, by race and discipline, in 14 Southern states provides only a partial view of the total supply within the nation. "However," she writes, "the distribution of faculty by race and discipline in the Southern region is illustrative of the national picture."

Blood drive, 'Push'

The West Tennessee Farm. If you have any black and white photographs picturing West Tennessee farm folks in their daily activities which you think could be copied and enlarged, please contact Dr. Marvin Downing, Dr. Harry Hutson, or Dr. Charles Ogilvie, the History office, UTM, 587-7470 or mail the photographs to the UT Martin, History-Political Science Department, Martin, TN 38238 by March 15. They will be returned to you.

A Phi O activities underway

The brothers of Alpha Omega, national service fraternity on campus, will sponsor a blood drive on Feb. 27 and 28 in the University Center as part of the "pre-push" activities for their annual "Push" for St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital.

"St. Jude desperately needs blood for important research and treatment of catastrophic childhood diseases," stated Carl Hesse, chairman of the blood drive.

In order to enlist students in this important project a contest will be conducted. The organization with the greatest number and with the greatest percentage of supporters of

Literary magazine begins publication

By BARRY WARBRITTON
Staff Writer

A new literary magazine has recently been published at UTM.

The Upstart Crow, edited and published by William E. Bennett, associate professor of English at UTM, is a varied collection of criticism and comment on the works of William Shakespeare.

According to Bennett, the magazine is published to give anyone interested in Shakespeare an opportunity to be read and published.

"Readers of Shakespeare arrive at many different conclusions about his plays and poems," he said. "Although the editors have certain inclinations and prejudices, we hope to show a range of ideas and styles in the magazine."

"I wish to express appreciation to Dean Milton Simmons, Dr. John McCluskey; and the people who have read for me. Professors Dock Adams, Martha Battle, Walter Haden, and Frank Windham," Bennett said.

Paul Ramsey of UT Chattanooga and Joan Hartwig of The University of Kentucky will be on the editorial board in the future.

Contributing writers to date include Roy Battenhouse, professor of English at the University of Indiana and Paul Ramsey, professor and authority on Shakespearean sonnets from the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

The semi-annual journal, first published in the fall of 1978, has a readership ranging from students and faculty to libraries seeking a more complete picture of Shakespeare.

To obtain a copy of The Upstart Crow, contact William E. Bennett at the English department.

BSU will observe 'Emphasis Week'

By LAWRENCE HOLDER
Staff Writer

The Baptist Student Union is observing Christian Home Emphasis Week during Feb. 19-23.

Jerry Self spoke last Tuesday night at the BSU on the subject of "God's Guidance in Finding a Mate," relating how Christians can use the word of God in their personal relationships, particularly in the task of finding the right husband or wife.

Every Thursday evening at 7:00 the BSU will be having a Bible Study. This week, Jerry Nash will lead the study on the roles of the husband and wife in the Christian home, and their submission to each other.

On Friday, Feb. 23, at 6:00 p.m., Larry Washburn will speaking at the Pot Luck Supper being held at the BSU. Washburn will be speaking on "The Christian and His Finances: How to Make Your Credit Work for You." Everyone is invited to attend; anyone interested in requested to call for reservations by Thursday night, Feb. 22.

Revival team note: Anyone interested in participating in the revival team of the BSU should contact Paula McGehee in McCord. The team meets on Thursday from 8:15 until 8:45 p.m., and plans for youth revivals at nearby churches. The team is made up of all those who wish to take an active part in lifting up the name of Jesus through outreach into the community.

Film series currently in progress at UTM

By BEVERLY BOMER
Assistant News Editor

The English and communications and fine arts departments have a curricular series of films that is currently in progress. The film series was derived from Vanguard films, the oldest on campus founded by Bill Snyder.

Different films are shown each quarter. This quarter the English department is presenting adaptations to drama such as "King Lear" (Brook version) and "Three Sisters" (American version).

Three more films are scheduled for this quarter: "The Pumpkin Eater," Feb. 13; "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," Feb. 20; and "Long Day's Journey," March 6.

"We're trying to work the films into the freshman program of studies. A lot of freshmen are encouraged to attend these films," James Andreas, director of the English film series, stated.

The films are shown on Tuesday nights in the Norman Campbell Auditorium at 7 p.m. The admission is 75 cents.

Approximately $150-$200 is earned each quarter. These profits are used to bring a speaker to UTM who will address the freshman class.

"We are trying to get some one of the novelists that we have studied to speak. We think this will be really interesting," Andreas said.

The communications department has films that are currently being shown, too. There is a series of six this quarter. These films are shown on Thursday nights in the Norman Campbell Auditorium at 7 p.m. Admission is $1.00.

Films such as "A Man For All Seasons" and "Smiles for Summer" have been shown this quarter. Next week "Jules and Jim" (a foreign film) will be shown. On Feb. 22, "The Yellow Submarine" starring The Beatles is scheduled to be shown. The last film will be on the Martha Graham Dance Company.

"We've really had good responses to these films both quarters. It's a lot more interesting to the students now," Gary Steinke, director of the communication film series, said.

Panel discussion slated

Phi Epsilon Omicron is sponsoring a panel discussion entitled "The Test Tube Baby and Artificial Insemination" on Tuesday, Feb. 27 at 5 p.m. in the Gooch Hall auditorium.

Panelists for the discussion include Rev. Tom Hughes, an Episcopal priest, who will represent the religious viewpoint, Mike Malone, and attorney-at-law, who will represent the legal viewpoint, Dr. Phillip Watkins, dean of Undergraduate Life, who will present the genetics viewpoint, Roy Lawrence, a gynecologist, who will represent the medical viewpoint, and Judy Wakim, dean of Nursing, who will present the parent-child relationship viewpoint.

Moderator for the discussion will be Jean Erwin, professor of Child Development and Family Relationships at UTM. The panel discussion will be open to all interested persons.
